St. Bens resident steps down from CAN TV

Chicago Access Network Television's Board of Directors bid farewell to seven-year member and St. Ben's resident Peter Skosey at their annual meeting last Wednesday. Skosey, who had reached the term limit for CAN TV board members, served two terms as board chair. He has also served as vice chair, secretary and chair of the board development committee.

Skosey has worked for the Metropolitan Planning Council as that organization's director of urban development since 1996.

CAN TV leadership credits him with leading the station's efforts to protect public channels under new video franchise legislation, introduced in Springfield in 2007.

CAN TV, Chicago's public access television station, provides video training, equipment, facilities and channel time for Chicago residents and nonprofit groups interested in using cable television to communicate with the community at large.

They hold bimonthly programming and services orientation sessions at their offices at 322 South Green St. For more information, go to www.cantv.org or call 312-738-1400.
